ABOUT THE EDITORS

Thomas Murphy has lectured on industrial relations in University College Dublin since 1979. He has held appointments at executive level in industrial relations and personnel management in the semi-state sector, and was one of the founders of Industrial Relations News. He has written widely on trade union organisation at company level, and on the impact of employment law on the practices of employers and trade unions.

Professor Bill Roche is Dean of the Michael Smurfit Graduate School of Business at University College Dublin. He is also Director of Research in the Faculty of Commerce and Management. His research is on human resource management. His publications include a book on the management of human resources. Professor Roche is also a member of the Advisory Committee on the Management of the University of Dublin.

Irish Studies in Management is a new series of texts and research-based monographs covering management and business studies. Published by Oak Tree Press in association with the Graduate School of Business at University College Dublin, the series aims to publish significant contributions to the study of management and business in Ireland, especially where they address issues of major relevance to Irish management in the context of international developments, particularly within the European Union. Mindful that most texts and studies in current use in Irish business education take little direct account of Irish or European conditions, the series seeks to make available to the specialist and general reader works of high quality which comprehend issues and concerns arising from the practice of management and business in Ireland. The series aims to cover subjects ranging from accountancy to marketing, industrial relations/human resource management, international business, business ethics and economics. Studies of public policy and public affairs of relevance to business and economic life will also be published in the series.
