ECONOMIC CRISIS, TRADE UNIONS AND THE STATE

Edited by

Otto Jacobi, Bob Jessop, Hans Kastendiek and Marino Regini

As the developed world moves out of recession, the relationship between trade unions, business and the state is being radically changed. This is the result of new technologies and rationalisation which are having profound effects on work organisation and workforce size; of the impact of recession itself; and the fact that many developed countries now have right-wing governments which are committed to monetarism and to free enterprise. This book surveys the current economic crisis and the impact it is having on trade unions, business and the state and the relationship between them. It looks at the new roles which trade unions are having to adopt and it discusses the new policies of the state towards trade unions. It shows how both the industrial and political power of trade unions has dramatically changed, and it examines how the new relationships are developing.

Otto Jacobi is a Principal Research Fellow at the Institute for Social Research, Frankfurt.

Bob Jessop is a Lecturer in Government at the University of Essex.

Hans Kastendiek is in the Department of Political Science at the Free University of Berlin.

Marino Regini teaches Sociology at the University of Milan and Comparative Politics at the Johns Hopkins University in Bologna.
